BARNES-HOPPER HOUSE
Havre de Grace, Md.

c. 1835, c. 1870

The Barnes-Hopper House is an interesting example of two distinct styles of architecture seen in one building. The house was originally built in the style of a Federal row house and was updated c. 1870 in a vernacular Italian Villa style. However, instead of removing all the Federal evidence such as the pedimented dormers, the principal facade was changed from the south elevation to the west, and a porch and bay were added. This alteration left the south elevation intact, but with a window where the door had been.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Barnes-Hopper House is located on the corner of Ontario St. and N. Adams St. facing west. The structure is a detached square, three-bay, two-and-a-half story Federal brick townhouse on a slightly raised basement. The brick walls, laid in common bond, are painted white. A two story el with a Victorian bay on the west elevation extends to the rear of the main section. A modern addition constructed of board and batten and shingles, encloses a porch on the west wall of the el.

A simple entrance portico shelters the central bay of the facade (west elevation). It has circular posts on square bases supporting a plain cornice and hip roof. Three cement steps are on the south side of the cement porch platform.

Currently the house is entered from the west side. However, altered brick work and a long, brick flat arch above the window on the southwest corner, south elevation indicates that a door was once there. Possibly when the two-story bay on the north side of the west elevation was added, the entrance door was moved to its present location. Another alteration was the bricking over of the first and second story windows, west elevation, main block. Since the main stairway is on that wall, possibly the windows were blocked off when the stairway was either moved from another location in the house or put in for the first time.

Most of the windows have 6/1 light double-hung sash. The exceptions are the south elevation dormers which have 6/6 lights and the bay windows which have 1/1 lights. All the window openings have brick flat arches and stone sills; even the bricked in windows on the west elevation retain these features.

The entry door, as mentioned previously, is located in the central bay of the facade (west elevation). It has a recessed frame with a one-light transom above it containing etched and leaded glass; the door itself having eight panels.

Projecting from the beginning of the el on the west elevation is a two-story brick bay. The bay has a corbeled band separating the first and second stories and the roof, slightly conical in shape, is supported by a bracketed cornice.

Both the main block and the el have asphalt shingles, medium pitch, gable roofs; the ridge on the main block runs eastwest, while that of the el runs north to south. The main block has a box cornice with a fascia board underneath it that terminates slightly before the ends of the south elevation walls.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The areas of significance for the Barnes-Hopper House are architecture, local history, and community planning.

The Barnes-Hopper House is an interesting example of two distinct styles of architecture seen in one building. The house, built c. 1835 in the style of a Federal row house was updated c. 1865 in a vernacular Italian Villa style. However instead of removing all the Federal evidence such as the pedimented dormers, the principal facade was changed from the south elevation to the west, and a porch and bay were added. This alteration left the south elevation intact but with a window where the door had been.

Probably built by the Barnes family, the house was lived in for any years by the Hopper family. John Hopper bought the property in 1864. It was his son, Peter Lesley Hopper, who was responsible for the "Hopper Map of Havre de Grace - 1899, compiled from the original survey," which is still used today.

The structure is significant to community planning as one of the finest brick town houses in Havre de Grace. This building along with the Parker Mitchell House (HA-L105), and others, reflect a time when the town was a prosperous re-shipping port for grain, lumber and coal and fish served by the Chesapeake and Tidewater Canal and the railroads. During these years, roughly 1830-1870, approximately fifteen brick dwellings standing today were erected or considerably enlarged. It is vital to the town's appearance that these buildings be carefully maintained as they provide the necessary contrast in a town in which the great majority of dwellings are built of wood.

Two brick chimneys, joined at the base, rise from the east wall of the main block. Another large brick chimney straddles the ridge of the roof of the center of the wing.

The house sits on a corner with a large yard at the rear and east; on the south front it is shaded by several large trees. Although there are no out buildings, there is an iron hitching post near the end of the west wall and a flagstone walk on the east side.

Interior:

The house is divided into apartments with open string stairs rising to the third floor set against the west wall in the front hall. On the second floor east wall, middle room, is a fireplace with rectangular molding on the long mantel shelf supported by square, fluted pilasters.
